JAPAN LIKE A LOCAL · TOKYO FOOD MAP

48 Tokyo food spots for your first trip

12 Gyoza | 12 Ramen | 12 Unagi | 12 Yakitori

For every spot: the Japanese name to show staff, nearest station, what to order, cash or card, booking rules, English menu, opening days where published — plus a one-tap Google Maps link.

Facts checked against official and store pages, Oct 29 – Nov 2, 2026.

How to use this guide

1. Pick a spot near where you are. Use the area index on the next page, or browse by food.
2. Check the Pay and Book lines first. Many small shops in Tokyo take cash only, and some popular ramen shops only work with timed tickets or online booking.
3. Tap "Open in Google Maps". It searches the shop's Japanese name and address. Check that the branch name matches before you go.
4. At the door, point to the Japanese name. Staff can read it instantly.

Reading each card

CASH ONLY — the shop says cash only. NO CARDS · BRING CASH — cards, e-money and QR are not accepted, so bring yen. CARDS ONLY · NO CASH / NO CASH — bring a card or phone payment. CARDS OK — at least some cards accepted (brands listed). CASH / QR, CASH / IC CARD — cash plus that method; credit cards not confirmed. PAYMENT: CHECK — not published; bring both.
English menu — "Yes" means the shop or its listing says it has one. "Online only" means we found an English menu online but could not confirm one in the shop. "Unknown" means we could not confirm either way — it does not mean there is none.
Unknown anywhere means the information was not published. We never guessed.

Good to know

• Prices are the ones published by the shop or its listing when we checked. "Tax included" is only written where the source said so.
• Some izakaya-style shops add a small table charge (otoshi) per person. Where the shop lists one, it is on the card.
• Shops change hours, prices and payment without notice. Check the shop's page or Google Maps on the day, especially for closing days marked "confirm".
• This guide was researched with the help of AI tools. Every fact on a card comes from the shop's official page or its restaurant listing (sources list included), and the guide was checked a second time before release. It is independent: no shop paid to be included.
